The immune system plays a pivotal role in atherosclerosis. Mass cytometry and single cell RNA sequencing are high dimensional methodologies allowing for a detailed assessment of aortic leukocyte populations including cell-type-specific pathways.

Data obtained from these approaches establishes functional relevance of leukocyte subsets in human atherosclerotic lesions.

The Immune Cell Atlas in Atherosclerosis