The Robert M. Berne Cardiovascular Research Center Presents

Nathan Stitziel, MD, PhD

Affiliation: Associate Professor of Medicine and Genetics; Washington University School of Medicine, Saint Louis MO

Leveraging (mis)fortunes of the genome to target cardiovascular disease

Genomic studies have the potential to discover genetic factors associated with risk and protection from cardiovascular disease. Results from these studies can be useful in identifying and validating therapeutic targets for the diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of cardiovascular disease.

Thursday November 7th, 2019
11:00 AM-12:00 PM
MR5 3005

Hosted by: Ken Walsh, PhD
Refreshments Served